bulletin on the control of insects and plant diseases, reprinted at the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

By careful spraying experiments conducted by growers themselves, it is shown that the average annual preventable loss to potato growers in this state from blights and insects is nearly fifty bushels to the acre. This represents a yearly loss of more than ten million dollars which might be prevented by spending less than ten dollars an acre for spraying.

Estimate of Losses.

A careful estimate of losses from the loose smut of oats in New York shows that five per cent of the crop is destroyed annually by this fungus disease, a net loss of more than a million dollars in 1919 when the government survey was made. The losses from apple scab, codling moth, and San Jose scale, from peach yellows and fire blight, and from all the other common insect pests and destructive plant diseases, if they could be accurately calculated, would show a grand total of appalling magnitude. This tremendous annual tax on the plant production of the state might be greatly reduced by the proper application of known methods of control.

The method of control to be employed for a given insect pest of fungus disease must be determined by the nature and habits of the enemy and by the character of the crop attacked. Plants can seldom be cured of disease as are men and animals; they must be protected from the attack. If sucking insects are to be controlled, something must be applied that will kill when it hits them; if biting insects are to be combated, the fruit and foliage of the plants must be sprayed or dusted with a poison that when eaten will destroy the pest.

Prevent Diseases.

Many fungus diseases are prevented by spraying the plants before the disease appears, with a mixture destructive to the fungus but harmless to the plant. The poisons that destroy fungi are seldom effective against insects, and hence we have fungicides and insecticides. Often these can be combined in one mixture for insect and fungus pests of certain crops as, for example, arsenate of lead and lime sulphur for controlling codling moth and apple scab.

Best Planting Distance for Many Fruit Plants

Many times fruit plants are planted too close and growth is unsatisfactory, states C. Woolsey, University of Arkansas college of agriculture extension service. The common distances recommended are as follows: Apples, 35 feet apart each way; peaches, 21 feet apart each way; cherries, 21 feet apart each way; plums, 21 feet apart each way; pears, 21 feet apart in a

Let the Wind Clean Your Chimney

More fires are caused by defective flues than all other causes combined. The Renner Automatic Chimney Cleaner keeps the flue clean of soot all the time and does its work with every changing breeze.

A chain is attached to the cross bar under the vane and extends down into the chimney its full length. As the wind rotates the vane the chain sweeps the soot from the inside of the flue, and the draft blows the soot into the outside air. The wind does the work. A clean chimney prevents fires, aids combustion and saves fuel. This device, all metal, once installed needs no attention, no repairs, costs nothing to operate, lasts a lifetime and pays for itself in a few years. It saves perpetually having to risk life and limb climbing to the roof of your house to clean the chimney each year, or paying a professional "chimney sweep" to do this work for you. Easily installed by any handy man. Write for literature and price.
